Highlights

- Matched budgets separate temporal allocation from increased control strength.
- Strong fixed and linear controls outperform the historical middle window.
- A small bake benefit is not detected in a separate twenty-object cohort.
- Fixed-seed checks distinguish average gains from repeatable object benefits.