Highlights

- Equal applied budgets do not support the historical middle-window preference.
- Strong fixed and linear controls change the practical recommendation.
- Full-frame gains can coexist with worse foreground agreement.
- Small baked-view gains do not transfer consistently across protocols.
- Fixed seeds distinguish average effects from repeatable object benefits.